Letter of Motivation

Dear Sir or Madam,

My name is Stefano Vitelli and I am twenty-six years old Argentinian- Italian citizen. In the past 4 years after having finished my University studies in Physical Education and Culinary arts, I have moved to Europe from my home country Argentina. During this 4-year period of time, I had the chance to get to know numerous different fields of work, such as working as a Receptionist in a Hostel of Big Fish in Las palmas de Gran Canaria, working as an Executive chef in the Restaurant of Almalibre in Madrid, etc. However, all these various job opportunities not only provided me with professional experience but also made me realize that I still haven't found yet what I was looking for.

Recently my cousin who is working as a programmer, made me an insightful glance into the world of IT, which has made a big impact on me, and with his help and support, I found my new passion and interest. I believe the importance of the knowledge of IT, is increasing day by day, as our society is heading towards a technologically developing future. As far as I am concerned the more knowledge I have, the better and wider perspective is provided for me in order to be able to work more accurately. There is no better opportunity for me to be able to enrichen my knowledge and dig deeper in this 'new world' than moving abroad and trying to seek job opportunities, which will help me to orientate in this huge world of IT.

Learning different languages has been always a virtue of mine, and based on my experiences, the most efficient way of acquiring the highest language skills can only be achieved by living in the target language's country where you would be able to practice your skills on a daily basis. When I have done my Italian citizenship I have learned Italian in an autodidactic way, because I know the importance of learning new languages, as I believe every new language is a new opportunity for me to get to know a culture in the very deepest and closest way.

In the past few months I have already launched into the studies of programming to be able to conquer my aim as soon as possible: becoming a Full Stack Developer. During this period of my studies, I gained knowledge in HTML, CSS, JavaScript, and I am currently getting deepen in the knowledge of React, Git and GitHub.

As a truly passionate person, I fall in love with my projects and put my heart and soul into ensuring they succeed. I am considering myself a hardworking and enthusiastic person. Seeking to use my knowledge of my previously gained experiences and my advanced communication skills to effectively serve your company in this position. Dedicated and committed to becoming a dependable and valuable team member of yours. I'm really driven by results. I like it when I have a concrete goal to meet and enough time to figure out a strong strategy for accomplishing it. I know that I am self-motivated. I give my all to any project and am always looking ahead to the next task at hand. Successfully completing one project and moving on to the next one is very exciting for me.

Yours faithfully,

Stefano Vitelli
